JEROME SLEUTHS AFTER VANDERBI

They Surround the Fifth Avenue Mansion After Tip Reached Officials that He Had Come to Town, and Watch the Place in Relays.

Eight county detectives, of Mr. Jerome's staff, armed with a bundle of subpoenas commanding Reginald Vanderbilt to appear at a secret hearing before the District-Attorney and Justice Wyatt to tell of his experiences in Canfield's gambling-house, have formed a cordon about the mansion of Frederick Neilson, at No. 100 Fifth .. venue, guarding every avenue of exit, in the hope of pouncing on the young millionaire when he leaves the house. So patent is the patrolling of the house by the sleuths St. Louis 1 0 0 0 0 1 3 0- 8 that a great crowd has collected on Fifth avenue to watch their antics.

In the course of the day the detectives rang the doorbell to the Neilson home at least 100 times. Frederick Gebhard, uncle of the young millionaire, became enraged at the throng that collected about the house this afternoon, summoned three policemen and secured the arrest of two

One of the Jerome men named Platt Insists that he saw Mr.

As soon as Mr. Jerome learned that Reginald Vanderbilt had journeved the District-Attorney's gum-shoe men. Te order was issued to surround Mrs. Frederick Nellson's home, at No. 100 Fifth avenue. All night long that desperate Hawkshaw, Reardon, Deputy Chief of the County Detectives, and his able assistant, O'Shea, fluttered stealthily around the house, watching van drew up to the mansion Reardon rushed to the telephone and summoned four more sleuths to aid him to his vigil.

Just when Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Vanderbilt got into the Nellson man. sion is not known to the astute detectives who are guarding every avenue of approach. That they are still in the Fifth avenue dwelling Reardon, They have inductive proof. They have demonstrative evidence obtained in an interview with the Neilson butler. The butler informed the vigilant detectives that the Vanderbilts had gone. They have informed the vigilant McGinnity struck out. NO RUNS. detectives that the Vanderbilts had gone. That is practically all he said, but this is what Reardon, O'Shea, Rooney and Qualls have built out of it:

If the Vanderbilts have gone, they must have come. If they came, they must have been in the house. If they were in the house, they were in the house. But they could not have gone, for did not Reardon and O'Shea! shadow every person who approached its front and rear? They have seven different photographs of Reginald Vanderbilt in seven different costumes. They would know him in any of these habits, and maybe in others. The only person who was seen to leave the house last night was an old roman who had been to visit one of the servants.

Reardon and O'Shea got out their double-lensed binoculars pected the aged female from head to toe. She was very frail and quite mt. She had gray hair, and the manner in which she worked her teeth convinced the detectives that there was unnatural mechanism about them Then the old woman could not have weighed more than eighty pounds. Reginald Vanderbilt weighs 181 pounds. Could he disguise himself to the

It took many hours for the county detectives to reason all this out, and when the gray dawn fell upon their vigilant shadows trekking back and torth before the Neilson mansion, watching the mahogany doors, the iron gate at the basement entrance, the high chimneys rising from the roof, the ventilating flue of the rear extension, the grim-looking drain pipes in the RACING ON WESTERN TRACKS. rear yard, they decided to call for reinforcements.

They had discovered a small hole under the back fence leading to the ar yard of a house fronting in West Sixteenth street. County Detective Rooney has been placed on guard at this house, Sleuth Qualls occupies a similar post on West Fifteenth street, where he keeps careful watch on a house whose butler is a friend of the Neilson butler.

An automobile drew up to the Neilson house shartly before 4 o'clock and Frederick Gebhard appeared in the doorway. Before any of the of-Acial watchers could get near him he bounded down the steps, signalling to his chauffeur to start the machine. From the pavement he reached the auto in a flying leap, and in another second was speeding up Fifth avenue at such a clip that a bicycle policeman gave chase and warned the chauffeur to slow down.

The car sped back to the house half an hour later, but when Mr. Gebhard saw a flanking line of cameras waiting for him he had his chauffeur crowd on all possible speed and took the corner of Fifteenth street on two wheels, disappearing in a cloud of dust toward fixth avenue. When Mr. Gebhard returned to the mansion an hour later he rode in a hansom with the flaps closed and holding his hands over his face. By this time the street was thronged with people watching the slippery sleuths tip-toe about.

As Mr. Gebhard got out of the cab an alert photographer stepped up and snapped him. What Mr. Gebhard said to the reporter should be set up in dashes and zigzags. He then rushed ino the house, where his lawyer was awaiting him. Then the two came out, summoned three policemen and

For the sake of a little dog, weight about five pounds, and height almost eleven inches, which is known as Nellie Bartsch, of No. 335 Tenth street, Jersey bers of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, lawyers, judges, policemen and neighbors of Mrs. who charges the little dog with having and sentence her to death. The State law provides that all vicious dogs and biting dogs in New Jersey must suffer the full penalty of that law.

Then hars Bartsch came forward. She told of her children's devotion to the dog. Her neighbors testined to the animals good character. Members of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals became interested, and then the police came to the conclusion that Nellie couldn't be such a bad dog after all. Lawyers took up the case, and a reprisew was granted to Nellie.

Flannagan ansists that the dog must die, and quotes the law to show that he is right in his contention.

The only thing that will save Nellie is a change in the State law, and this might be done, as Judge Higgins, who is right in his contention.
